

Consultant: Hello Isabella, thank you for meeting with me today. As discussed, I will be asking you a few questions to better understand your beauty salon so we can design a software system that fits your business needs.

Isabella: Hi! That sounds great. I'm glad you're helping with this because managing everything manually is becoming difficult.

Consultant: Can you tell me about your salon and the services you offer?

Isabella: Sure. My salon offers several beauty services including haircuts, hair coloring, hairstyling, manicures, pedicures, and occasionally facial treatments.

Consultant: How do your customers currently book appointments?

Isabella: Most customers call the salon or send messages through social media. I usually write the appointments down in a notebook or on a calendar.

Consultant: Do you experience any issues with the current appointment scheduling process?

Isabella: Yes, sometimes appointments overlap or we accidentally double-book an employee. It can also be hard to keep track of cancellations or changes.

Consultant: Do you keep any records of your customers?

Isabella: Not really. I usually just write their names in the appointment book. We don't have a system that keeps customer history or contact details.

Consultant: Would it be useful to store customer profiles and service history?

Isabella: Yes, definitely. It would help us remember what services a customer previously had or which treatments they prefer.

Consultant: How many employees currently work in your salon?

Isabella: At the moment there are four employees including me. Some specialize in hair services, while others mainly perform nail treatments.

Consultant: How do you manage employee schedules?

Isabella: I manage them manually. I assign employees to appointments depending on their availability and the service requested.

Consultant: How do you currently track payments?

Isabella: Customers pay after their service, usually in cash or by card. I record payments manually in a notebook.

Consultant: Do you generate any reports or track business performance?

Isabella: Not in a structured way. I try to track revenue, but it's difficult to analyze which services are most popular or how much we earn each day.

Consultant: Would automated appointment reminders for customers be helpful?

Isabella: Yes, that would be very helpful. Sometimes customers forget their appointments, which leaves empty time slots.

Consultant: Would you be interested in allowing customers to book appointments online?

Isabella: Yes, that would make things easier for both customers and the salon.

Consultant: Finally, who would use this system in the salon?

Isabella: I would use it as the owner. Employees should be able to see their schedules, and a receptionist could manage bookings and customer information.

Consultant: Thank you, Isabella. This information will help us design a salon management system that supports appointment scheduling, customer management, employee scheduling, payment tracking, notifications, and reporting.

Isabella: That sounds exactly like what we need.
